

Artist's rendition of the MISR instrument on the Terra satellite, which produces images of the Earth at nine discrete look angles using multispectral pushbroom cameras during the daytime portion of each Earth orbit. The swath width of MISR is 400 km and thus requires nine days to obtain complete global coverage.

